WEYLER'S BLOODY RECORD.

The revelations regarding Weyler's administration in Cuba, made by Rev. Alberto J. Diaz, the expelled Baptist missionary, before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, are not calculated to increase the patience of the American people respecting Spain's rule in the island. On the contrary, if anything were lacking to stir up the wrath of Americans against Spanish misgovernment it was furnished by Dr. Diaz's account of the sights he saw and the occurrences with which he became familiar. His statements went to show that a great many people reported by the Spanish generals as insurgents killed in battle were peaceful citizens, murdered wantonly and in cold blood. Not even women and children have been spared, and in many instances were compelled to stand by and see their dear ones slain before their very eyes.

It might not be a bad idea for Rev. Dr. Diaz, if he could obtain a guarantee of personal safety, to go to Madrid and give Senor Canovas del Castillo an inkling of the kind of warfare Weyler is conducting in Cuba and of the impotence of the Spanish military forces. That being out of the question, however, the next best thing for him to do is to bring Congress to a realization of the fact that whatever moved it to express its opinion in the resolution now pending in some pigeon-hole in the White House was a mere nothing as compared with the actual state of affairs in the island. It is not probable that Senator Morgan will allow Congress to adjourn without making an effort to have his latest resolutions passed upon by the Senate, and, if possible, by the House of Representatives also.

In the meantime General Fitzhugh Lee will have arrived in Cuba. It will not take that veteran commander long to gauge conditions properly and make reports to the President. It is said that upon this report will depend the action to be taken by the Executive. In that event it may be regarded as a foregone conclusion that such a communication will be addressed to Spain as cannot fail to bring matters to a climax. However positive and energetic his course may then be it will not go beyond the wishes of the people of the United States. Their sympathy has been expressed in words and made manifest in many acts; it needs but the signal for them to show Spain that the Americans will not permit the butchery of helpless farmers and innocent women and babes in arms to go on indefinitely.

THOSE RELIEF FUNDS.

Not a few people in Washington entertain the mistaken idea that the policemen's and firemen's relief funds are invested sums, the interest on such interest is used for the payment of pensions, and that the scaling down of these pensions has been made necessary by an increase in the number of beneficiaries beyond the capacity of the interest account. The fact is the case, however, is that the pensions have been paid from the principal of the respective funds and that it is merely a question of time when these will be exhausted. True, the appropriation of $4,000 for the policemen and $2,000 for the firemen, and the further provision authorizing the Commissioners to make good any deficiency in the funds from fines collected in the police court, puts the matter in somewhat better shape, but yet it is not in as substantial a form as it ought to be.

These relief funds, like any other fund, from which regular annual payments have to be made, should be large enough to earn such interest as would be sufficient, together with the monthly assessments upon the members of the police force and the fire department, respectively, to pay all pensions in full. That would be a business-like arrangement and give assurance to every policeman and to every fireman that in the event of any evil befalling him, his family would get the full amount to which they are entitled under the regulations and that there would be no need for scaling down because of ebbs in the treasury. The description given in the Evening Times yesterday of the condition of these relief funds is anything but cheering to the possible beneficiaries.

There is a way out of the difficulty if Congress be but generous enough to take it. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, the fines in Judge Kimball's branch of the police court, which is devoted to District cases, amounted to about $24,000. Fines collected in this court are turned into the Treasury. For the same year $11,000, in round numbers, was collected in Judge Miller's court, where the United States cases are tried. These fines are placed to the credit of the school fund. The District treasury is plenteous enough to do without the $24,000, and the public schools of the National Capital should not be maintained, even in smallest part, by revenues that are the result of people's misdoings. If the $24,000, or whatever amount is collected in the one branch of the police court, were set aside, for, say, five years, for the policemen's relief fund, and the fines collected in the other branch for the firemen's fund, each would be upon a sound and safe footing, and the payment of full pensions would be assured beyond a doubt.

SEEING A NEW LIGHT.

Nikola Tesla has announced to the world that he has perfected his latest invention, an electric lamp without any filament or film, and a revolution in electric lighting is at hand. The lamp is a bulb a few inches long, charged, so far as the eye can detect, with nothing at all—a perfect vacuum. Into this bulb a current of electricity is introduced and a light is produced so bright that fine print can be read in the farthest corner of a large room, where but a single one of these lamps is employed. Tesla gets ten per cent of illuminant from his materials, whereas the ordinary incandescent lamp yields but three.

It will readily be understood, even from this crude statement, what an immense saving will be effected by the lighting of streets, public buildings, stores and private residences. If the invention can be made use of at once, the problem of municipal lighting is solved for the smallest city as well as the largest. Edison is hard at work trying to eliminate the dynamo as a factor in the production of electricity, and when he succeeds—as there appears to be no doubt that he will—electricity will almost become a new agent and its power and usefulness be increased beyond measure.

It seems peculiarly opportune that just at this time the announcement is made that the Westinghouse and General Electric Companies have ceased their warfare upon each other and, while remaining competitors in the great field of electrical appliances, will use their patents in common. This will greatly cheapen all electrical appliances, and cause another forward movement in the general use of the great mechanical agent of the end of the century.

SINK ROOM GALLERY

SENATOR WILSON, of Washington, is one of the most genial members of the Senate. He brought over from the House his wide-awake, Western ways, and perhaps the lack of that dignity which befits a Senator about these days is attributable to the fact that he has been called down lately.

Now the Senate Committee on Rules gets it together whenever it feels like it, and passes certain rules. These rules are for the guidance of all save the Senators themselves. They are above petty regulations. One of the late rules made prohibits smoking in any of the corridors or passage ways of the Senate. Here is where Senator Wilson ran up against a circumstance.

He had been over to the House and came back puffing a fine Havana. Senate rules did not bother him and when he reached the Senate he kept on smoking all the same. He was hounded and this of itself was sufficient to stamp him as an amateur of the Capitol. But a policeman stopped and told him he could not smoke.

"Do you know who I am?" asked the Senator.
"No, sir," replied the officer.
"I've been around here seven years and I don't think you know me. I don't care so much about this but I started to the Senators' elevator the other day and the doorman around there wasn't going to let me pass. I'm getting tired of this."

"I know I'm not any prize beauty, but look at me. Look at me hard. Look at me so you'll know me the next time. I and he strode off smoking and came to the open-mouthed and nearly paralyzed. He didn't breathe comfortably till he made inquiries and found out who the bare-headed gentleman was.

THE Pennsylvania employees at the Capitol are the marks just now for a great outburst of good-natured chaffing. To a man they were all enthusiastic Quakers and wore his button on all occasions. Indeed some of them insisted that the new buttons fastened to their nightgowns.

Now that Senator Quay is putting himself in touch with Governor McKinley, the original McKinley, they are all trying to tell how it happened but no one will believe them.

JUDGING from the official report of Senator Morgan's recent speech on his Cuban resolutions, as published in the Congressional Record, it seems that the Cuban revolution is a case of a man in Spain, wherein Mr. Morgan was made to speak of the Cuban revolution as a "crisis" which was "inadequately heard and reported."

Mr. Morgan's remarks were general, not personal, and applied to the Spanish government, not to the Cuban people. His remarks were wise.

"The people of the United States, who are so severely criticized by the Cuban people for their alleged difference in sentiment toward the Cuban revolution, they are all trying to tell how it happened but no one will believe them."

REPRESENTATIVE WOODMAN of the Fourth Illinois district, familiarly known as "Squire" Woodman, who has just been defeated for re-election by John A. Logan, has declared his intention of bolting the decision of the convention, and will make the canvass as an independent Republican candidate. This action, it is expected, will result in the defeat of the Republicans and the election of a Democrat.

It is a rather singular coincidence that Mr. Woodman's bolting is due to the fact that the late Frank Lawler bolted the ticket of his party and carried away nearly 8,000 votes in the Democratic district in normally Democratic by more than 5,000 majority.

AN attempt of Representative Kern, the Populist member from Nebraska, to force the Speaker to recognize him for the consideration of a bill by refusing to permit the further transaction of business by the members present, is being watched with amusement and interest in the House.

Mr. Kern has a bill giving to the State of Nebraska an absolute military reservation to be used for school purposes. Mr. Reed would not permit him to recognize him for the reason that there are thirty or forty similar bills awaiting his decision, and he feels that all that class of legislation should be treated alike. To get even for what he characterizes as the "arbitrary, tyrannical and unjust" action of the Speaker, Mr. Kern remains constantly in his seat and persistently makes objection to every request for unanimous consent, no matter how trivial the matter may be.

Although Mr. Kern insists that he will continue his present tactics until the Speaker recognizes him for the purpose of bringing up his bill, it is the opinion, if not the universal opinion, that when it comes to a question of long-continued and deliberate obnoxious Mr. Reed can give the gentleman from Nebraska several points in the game and still beat him out.

A NUMBER of men were in one of the Speaker's rooms talking on one topic and another, without previous warning, the deluge of McKinley-mania was brought in. Several of those present seemed to imagine that the McKinley mania was a new kind of disease, and at once made strenuous efforts to divert the drift of the remarks into some other channel.

One of the speakers, perceiving their good intentions, smiled, and, to the astonishment of all, himself took up the same line of thought and said that the extensive advertisement of the McKinley mania at St. Louis reminded him of a story, which he proceeded to tell.

"When but a mere boy," said Mr. Reed, "the advanced state of travel and the coming of the railroads, and the fact that the McKinley mania was a new kind of disease, and at once made strenuous efforts to divert the drift of the remarks into some other channel."

RAISING BUFFALO TO SELL.
Texas Rancher Says the Bison Is Not Becoming Extinct.
Pittsburg Dispatch.

E. A. Beant, who is the Texas Duke, is a Texas rancher. He is visiting Duke A. Saxe, the oil producer. Mr. Beant wears the typical sombrero. His ranch is 130 miles north of San Antonio.

"I must knock a pretty story in the head," he remarked, "a story of the nature of 'Lo, the poor Indian,' and it is that the buffalo, or American bison, is becoming extinct. That's not so. Why do you know they are vanishing then? From Montana and Texas extensively, and on a smaller scale in some other places? A man in Montana is experimenting by crossing the buffalo with the black-poll Angus cattle. He is of the opinion that a finer hide can be obtained by this union."

"Goodnight, the greatest Texas cattlemen, has fully 2,000,000 acres of ground ranch in and is breeding the bison pure. He has fenced off a big tract of land and is well satisfied that he will make a success of his new enterprise. He has already sold many animals of his own raising to show people and to cross in several places. Goodnight, too, has a herd of elk, but they are not profitable. There is little or no sale for them. For meat purposes the buffalo is not in it. The tongue makes good eating and portions of the hindquarters, but the rest of the carcass is worth little for eating. It would make mighty good phosphate, though."

"I have sent a lot of cattle on to New York. My partner is in charge. We will get about 4 cents a pound or $4 per hundred, while parties in Texas who herd cattle to Galveston and ship to England get 11 cents per pound."
